Summary Report

ADC-2107: BIostatISTICS

Throughout the course, students were introduced to various types of data, descriptive statistics, and data visualization techniques on the first day, setting a solid foundation for understanding and analyzing medical data. The second day focused on probability concepts and distributions, where students learned about normal, binomial, and Poisson distributions, and the significance of the Central Limit Theorem.

Inferential statistics were covered on the third day, with detailed sessions on hypothesis testing, confidence intervals, and common statistical tests such as t-tests, Chi-square tests, and ANOVA. The fourth day was dedicated to correlation and regression analysis, emphasizing both simple linear regression and multiple regression techniques.

The program was conducted by Dr. Vaseem, Associate Professor of Community Medicine, Dr Venkat Sonkar and Dr. Ramesh, an in-depth understanding of biostatistical concepts and their application in medical research.

Each day included practical sessions with hands-on exercises using statistical software, allowing students to apply the theoretical knowledge to real-world medical data. The course concluded with a comprehensive review, open discussion, and final assessment, ensuring that students left with a robust and practical understanding of biostatistics, ready to apply these skills in their medical research and practice.
